This capacity for critical thinking, a kind of cold skepticism that never gives way to the cold wickedness of irony, is very rare. It requires an act of imagination: the willingness to think or feel inside the experience of others, to cross what Susan Sontag once called the realms of the sick and the good. Speaking of the plaster corsets Frida Kahlo wore to support the damaged spine, Jamison writes: "She would have given anything, perhaps, to have a body that would make them irrelevant, adding that after Kahlo's leg amputated, she died the following year, as if she had been this loss after so many others "It's what he finally couldn't bear." This is both histrionic and reductive. It's hard to imagine a stronger, more reflective voice emerging this year. In the virtuoso closing of the essay, he presents a script for Leslie Jamison: an intimate document, aesthetized but not anaesthetized by the presumed tone, medical dressing.Leslie JamisonCredit...Colleen KinderThe damaged physical body, the chasm between the patient and the witness, this is Jamisoná's territory. In an essay that blends brilliantly between a consideration of saccharin sentimentalism and artificial sweetening saccharin, known as sentimentalism and anti-feeling fascinate us "disturbing the vision of ourselves that we would most like to see", he continues: "If saccharin offers an enchantment of feeling, it does not diluted. . But it is a danger of maintaining its bigger point, which is worth risking a one feeling, rather than taking on the fashionable pose of the world's tiredness, which Å was too easily nuanced in detachment and then to cruelty. Empathy requires another kind of fousness in response. "It means power in the witness, the will to let the problems of a stranger infuriate and slowly explain their meaning. Jamison Å capable of the most extraordinary flourishes' of the image. A small point, and clearly a consequence of the form, does a wonder a little with a little hekkankerly what this collection could have been if only a touch of more had been worked'. Continue reading the main pain storyregarding of others requires more than a pair of eyes'. Å Jamison's credit that doesn't choose easy neutrality of the distanced observer, but rather travels deeply into both extremes, almost always maintaining an admirable awareness of the dangers of its approach. To the mechanisms of empathy, addressing not only its importance, as Rebecca Solnit has done in the last year Åç åÿThe distant neighborhood, Åç å äÿ, but also its complexities ethics. Out of wounds and across borders. Since everyone works to a certain extent on the narrow field of personal experience, they inevitably present the same elements of the autobiography, introduced perennially as for the first time. Not surprisingly, Jamison is drawing comparisons to Sontag, clearly an influence on much of the thinking here. here.
